With COVID-19, “normal” changes in existing systems cannot respond to human needs and we can perceive that the problems are diversifying and deepening day by day. While this situation requires us to take quick action, we not only need to develop solutions for today’s problems but also design the educational tools and systems of tomorrow. In this period of change, we feel the need to hear more youth workers’ voices and experiences, mobilise our resources in the most meaningful way and develop creative solutions in collaboration more than ever. Many business and economics have faced serious financial crises, another face the difficulties of using online tools to meet customer needs, the labour market had to transform and become more competitive and innovative in its business doing. "Business as usual is no more possible". These were the very common sentences which not only in the profit-making sector was said but also in schools, universities, and very much in the non-governmental sector. NGOs face serious problems in delivering their services to the communities as in its usual approach. The aim of this project is to educate youth worker and answer the needs appeared after the contemporary crisis such Covid-19. These training course objectives are: To teach 28 youth workers to understand the concept of the Human-Centred Design approach for problem-solving and design a learning experience in order to create solutions for delivering innovative NFL activities. To provide 28 participants with an expert framework for the Global Sustainable Goals, specifically SDG 4 (Quality Education)and new approaches and educational policies created by European Commission in order to fight with the Global disaster called COVID 19 and comply with the current situation.

OBJECTIVES

During the 11 days learning experience that this project proposes and with its follow up long-term impact consisting learning how to work with digital tools and create NFL experience in digital environment, the Youth workers are going to benefit from the following: Learners will be able to comprehend the SDG challenges determined by the United Nations during the COVID-19 period. Learners will be able to understand the concept of social innovation. Learners will be able to apply the Human-Centered Design process and its stages. Learners will be able to describe their complaints about their challenges, their dreams, what they know, and their ultimate goals. Learners will be able to empathize with people(their service customers) affected by their challenges. Learners will be able to create the “How Might WE...” question for which they will aim to develop solutions in the next stage…
